The Republicans of Prince George county held a meeting at the court-house on Saturday for the purpose of appointing delegates to the Congressional Convention which asembles in Norfolk on the 6th of September. Southall, 8.

The election was as fair as could have been made. The meeting was exceedingly boisterous, and the chairman found it impossible to preserve order sufficiently to state motions in a proper manner.

On motion of Mr. Stern, the election was made unanimous. The issue, therefore, in our local politics is simply a sectional one. There are those who think the counties "east" of the mountain should have the nomination; on the other hand, there are those who are not willing to run the risk of losing a man who is acknowledged efficient, although entertaining the warmest feelings of personal friendship for Mr. Southall. Thus the matter stands. As far as heard from three districts have gone for Southall and three for Horris. Last night some one attempted to break into the kitchen attached to the residence of Rev. K. B. Tupper. With a fearful howl he made his way over the fence, followed by a couple more balls. It is not known whether he was struck. But it isn't well for burglars to go fooling around preachers' houses.

SUTHERLIN, August 25, 1876. The Dan River Baptist Association concluded on yesterday a very interesting meeting at Mt. Tabor church, which is located in this vicinity. The attendance was large; the preaching unusually good, and the ladies of the congregation exerted themselves in their very effective way to minister to the wants of their guests. Since the rains set in tobacco has come out wonderfully, and many planters who thought at one time that they were ruined now calculate on making fair crops. crop is quite promising, too.

A Stolen Child.

REMARKABLE STORY FROM OMAHA—SCENE IN A TELEGRAPH OFFICE-MR. ROSS TALKS WITH THE CHILD OVER THE WIRES-A SINGULAR COINCIDENCE.

[From the Omaha Herald, August 22d.]

A great deal of interest was created in and around the Western Union Telegraph headquarters on Sunday afternoon by Justice Hale, Sheriff Burley, and several others bringing up a little boy to be identified, through the medium of the telegraph, by Mr. Ross, in Philadelphia, as his stolen six years old, light complexion, and the than that which falls to the lot of the common offspring of humanity. He was discovered by a Mrs. Bushnell, who lives near Prospect Hill cemetery, was living at the time in nell, who lives but a few doors from the place, had frequently observed the little flaxen-haired boy playing with the dusky scions of colored royalty, and became interested in the matter enough to question im. She learned that he was making his home with the colored family, and that he had no parents. He could not give a very clear account of how he came where she discovered him, but told about once living in a great city. She became still more interested, and questioned him further, and learned enough to convince her that he was a stolen child, and to lead her to strongly suspect that he was the long lost and universally mourned Charley Ross. The prospect $20,000 reward led her to take immeliate steps in the matter, and she consulted Justice. Hale, and the two, with the assistance of General Strickland, procured all the necessary information concerning Charley Ross, including a photograph of the genuine boy, and on Sunday afternoon took him out of the hands of the colored family and put nim in the custody of Sheriff Burley, and took him into the Western Union telegraph office, and an instant after broke in upon the Sunday afternoon meditations of Mr. Ross in Philadelphia with the startling announceevidently lives very near a telegraph office. or else the unqualified announcement that his little boy was at last found lent him the speed of a hurricane, for but a very few moments clapsed until an answer was flashed

"What's your name?" The operator interpreted the message to the little fellow, and he instantly replied:

but I haven't got any sisters. brothers and their ages? Arfswer: Henry Ross and Gus Ross.

The description of Mr. Ross's family was partly correct, and the operators asked to compare the photograph of Charthe present appearance of the little boy, and the gentlemen were forced to telegraph the fact that there was a remarkable resemblance. The same curly, flaxen hair, large, expressive eyes, and broad, high forehead, and intellectual appearance were common, both in the picture and the boy who stood at the operator's elbow. Mr. Ross was evidently deeply interested; the very lines seemed to tremble as they bore the query,

What is the color of his eyes?" The operator left the matter to the crowd. and they decided that they were a dark-bluish gray. This color, Mr. Ross declared, did not correspond with the color of Charley's eyes, which were light hazel. All of his children (six in number) had the same colored eyes, and it was noted that the older they grew the darker their eyes became, so that Charlev's eves at present should be of a dark-hazel color. Whatever hopes the answers of the little waif had raised in the breast of Mr. Ross, they seemed to have been dashed to the ground, and he sadly ordered the sheriff to lischarge the boy from custody, after profusely thanking him, Mr. Hale, and Mr. Knight, the chief operator, for their kind-fearful array of questions. He remembered being carried away once by a man in a buggy while he was playing with his litin a buggy to the cars, and going to another big city, where he says he saw the big ships that came across the sea. Upon being York, which he afterwards said was the place where he saw the big ships, he replied that it took a week, which, if the child was really Charley Ross, would be in opposition to the theory that he was taken directly to New York from Philadelphia. He remembers the people whom he stayed with rents, very well. He says his father was a ily, with whom he has lived until recently. says the family whipped and abused him so, and would not give him enough to eat, that he ran away and went to the house of the colored man, whose name is Smith

The boy is a very quiet, manly little fellow, more than ordinarily intelligent, with something about him, in manner and language, that will convince a person in a moment that he was not born in the common walk of humanity, and is without doubt a lost or stolen child. He corresponds precisely in age with Charley Ross, as little Charley was three years old when he was stolen, and three more years have elapsed since that event. In his wanderings the little fellow has had the painful misfortune to have had his arm broken, and in the reduction of the fracture a bad piece of surgery was performed. Several of our citizens have been interested in the bright, manly little waif, among them General Strickland, who yesferday informed us that he intended to adopt him and lift him immediately from his present path of life. FATAL ACCIDENT-MR. R. A. THOMASSON KILLED.

Special telegram to the Dispatch. GORDONSVILLE, VA., August 27 .- Last night about 11 o'clock, just after the arrival of the fifth section Chesapeake and Ohio eastern-bound freights, a portion of the train was cut loose and was backing in on the side-track, when it struck Mr. R. He was immediately removed to the reception-room and physicians sent for, who did all in their power to relieve the suffering man. He lingered until 11 o'clock to-day, when he died. The disaster was purely accidental, as Mr. Thomasson had started to go up the track, and no one knew he was near the train until the conductor, Captain Vasseur, heard some one asking for help.
